

Featured Project: Atlantic House, London

Stone Type: Limestone

Blending the old with the new: as part of this new headquarters building for Prudential, Stirling Stone were contracted to reinstate one of four old Portland limestone gatehouses which used to stand on this corner site at Holborn Viaduct.

Moulds were carefully taken from the existing gatehouse opposite to comply with a planning condition that the new building should replicate the original detailing. This included decorative friezes, heavily corbelled cornices and carved statues, as well as a balcony supported by two Greek god sculptures.
